Facilitator: Professor B B Chakrabarti
Former Professor of Finance, Indian Institute of Management, Calcutta

Coverage: The debt market in India consists of mainly two categories—the government securities markets comprising of central government and state government securities, and the corporate bond market. To finance its fiscal deficit, the government floats fixed income instruments and borrows money by issuing G-secs. The corporate bond market consists of financial institutions (FI) bonds, public sector units (PSU) bonds, and corporate bonds / debentures. The G-secs are the most dominant category of debt markets and form a major part of the market in terms of outstanding issues, market capitalization, and trading value. It sets a benchmark for the rest of the market. The size of the primary market is around Rs. 15 trillion.

We do also have trading of interest rate derivatives like futures and swaps in India, although the market for debt derivatives has not yet developed appreciably.

The tutorial aims to deliberate on the evolution, structure, market mechanism, participants and pricing of the debt market products in India including interest rate derivatives. The tutorial will also cover the issues and steps necessary to further develop the Indian debt market especially the corporate bond market.

- Pre – Conference Tutorial 2: 2:00 P.M. – 5:00 P.M.
Topic: Using Structured and Unstructured Data in Finance
Facilitator: Professor Bappaditya Mukhopadhyay
Professor of Finance, Great Lakes Institute of Management, New Delhi

Coverage: Modern techniques in Machine Learning and Analytics not only help us solve existing problems efficiently, it also adds new approaches in doing so. Traditionally we have handled problems in Finance that were through transaction data. While solutions based on these are often robust, it is limited by the data generated by the agents. In this workshop we will explore some of the Machine Learning Techniques that apply to both Structured and Unstructured Data. The workshop will be conducted on R Studio (a free package).
